HONEYWELL ACQUIRES AV DIGITAL AND ITS INNOVATIVE PUBLIC ADDRESS VOICE ALARM PORTFOLIO

Builds Advanced Position in Growing Voice Alarm System Industry, Expands Pervasive Fire Alarm Technology Expertise

Vienna, Austria, March 07, 2008 – Honeywell (NYSE: HON) today announced it has completed the acquisition of AV Digital Audio-Videotechnik GmbH, a privately held company specializing in highly complex and sophisticated public address and notification sound systems. AV Digital, based in Vienna, Austria, develops and manufactures a broad range of public address systems to assist in the safe evacuation of facilities during emergencies. The agreement has received the required regulatory approvals.

"With the growing demand for voice alarm guidance capability in commercial fire alarm systems, acquiring AV Digital is a great investment for Honeywell and significantly strengthens our portfolio with a broader selection of technology, products and services," said Mark Levy, President, Honeywell Life Safety. "By combining our technologies, we can deliver greater value through a more comprehensive offering of world-class solutions to our global customers."

"Aligning with Honeywell – one of the world's leading technology and fire systems companies – gives us an unprecedented ability to develop best-in-class offerings for our customers by leveraging Honeywell's innovative technology and wide distribution network," said Sabine Grubmüller, Managing Director of AV Digital.

AV Digital's product portfolio includes safety systems designed to safeguard people and provide clear and immediate information for existing or impending dangers. The sound systems deliver voice guidance providing reliable information and detailed instructions to evacuees, possible victims and rescue teams.
